Tothpal and Szabo v. Romania (nos. 28617/13 and 50919/13)

The applicants, Mr Bela Tothpal and Mr Csongor Szabo, are Romanian nationals who were born in 1966 and 1971 and live in Arad Gherla, respectively.

The case concerns their conviction for unlawfully exercising the duties of a priest.

Mr Tothpal was the pastor of the Lutheran evangelical community of the town of Arad. Following disciplinary proceedings, the Lutheran Church dismissed him and appointed a new pastor. Mr Tothpal continued to conduct services in the presence of some of the members of the community.

On 3 March 2010 the Lutheran Church and the parish, represented by the new pastor, lodged a criminal complaint against Mr Tothpal for the unlawful exercise of the duties of a priest. The public prosecutor's office gave a discontinuance decision, but nonetheless noted that priestly duties could only be performed with the agreement of the relevant religious organisations, and that in the instant case that agreement had been withdrawn from Mr Tothpal. It consequently gave him an administrative fine of 1,000 Romanian lei (RON - some 235 euros (EUR)). The complainants challenged that order, whereupon the Arad Court of First Instance imposed a criminal fine of 4,000 RON (some EUR 900) on Mr Tothpal. The court of appeal upheld that judgment on the grounds that Mr Tothpal had conducted specific Lutheran religious ceremonies despite the legal obstacle erected by his dismissal to his continued work as a minister in the Arad Lutheran parish.

In 1995 Mr Szabo was appointed as a priest in the village of Băița. In 2008, following a dispute, the Reformed Church terminated his contract of employment, dismissed him from the priesthood and banned him from conducting religious services. A new minister was appointed to the parish.

In February 2009 the Reformed Church lodged a criminal complaint against Mr Szabo for unlawful exercise of the duties of the priesthood. The public prosecutor's office dismissed the complaint, noting that the Băița Reformed community had been split since 2008, and that some of the congregation had deliberately followed Mr Szabo and attended his religious meetings, which differed from the usual Reformed Church service. The Reformed Church appealed.

The Gherla Court of First Instance convicted Mr Szabo of unlawfully exercising the duties of the priesthood. It found that he had acted in a manner incompatible with Christian teachings and had fomented controversy within the Băița Reformed community. The court sentenced him to an immediate two-month custodial sentence on the grounds that only imprisonment could induce him to think about his conduct and mend his ways by fasting and praying for at least 40 days, after which he could be released on licence. Mr Szabo appealed, and the Cluj Court of Appeal ruled that having regard to the rifts in the Băița Reformed community, imprisoning Mr Szabo would be liable to exacerbate the conflict.

The applicants allege that their criminal conviction for the unlawful exercise of the duties of a minister of religion amounted to a violation of their right to freedom of religion as secured under Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

Çataltepe v. Turkey \(application no. 51292/07\)

The applicant, Mr Ilimdar Çataltepe, is a Turkish national who was born in 1949 and lives in Ankara.

The case concerns an alleged infringement of his property rights on account of the annulment of his title deed, without compensation.

The applicant owned 312 sq. m of land in a jointly owned area of 1,146 sq. m. In 1998, after a redistribution of land, his plot became part of a new allotment. In 1995 the applicant and two other plotters lodged an action with the district court for the dissolution of the joint ownership, given that it was impossible to ascertain the identity and address of the last plotter.

In May 1999 Ankara District Court ordered the dissolution of the joint ownership and the judicial sale of the land. The judicial sale was organised by the Enforcement Office in 2001 in two parts. During the second sale the applicant purchased one plot and then a second as the purchaser from the first sale had retracted. The judicial sale was closed in February 2001 and the plots were registered in the cadastre in January 2002.

In December 2002 the Treasury requested the annulment of the entry on the land register concerning the applicant's property rights and the registration of the property in question in its own name. The applicant pointed out that he had purchased the plots lawfully during the judicial sale.

In May 2004 the Regional Court dismissed the Treasury's request. In the court's view it could not be denied that the applicant had purchased the property in a perfectly lawful way and that it was impossible to annul the entry at issue.

The Court of Cassation set that judgment aside in February 2005. It noted that the Treasury had intervened in the proceedings concerning the dissolution of the joint ownership and had requested that any judgment be deferred as it had lodged an action to annul an inheritance certificate. The court held that there was no doubt that the applicant must have known of the Treasury's application for annulment at the time of his purchase of the land at the judicial sale. The Court of Cassation took the view that it could not be accepted that the applicant had acted in good faith. On 30 June 2005 Ankara Regional Court annulled all the portions covered by the applicant's title deed.

The applicant lodged a further appeal on points of law, arguing that the Treasury had waited for three years to lodge its application for annulment and that the district court had initiated the judicial sale with full knowledge of the facts. In February 2007 the Court of Cassation dismissed the appeal on points of law, and in 2009 the Treasury sold his share of the land to a private company.

Relying on Article 1 (protection of property) of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention, the applicant alleges that the annulment of his title deed without compensation and the restrictions placed on all the plots covered by that deed had infringed his right to respect for his property.

Cumhuriyetçi Eğitim Ve Kültür Merkezi Vakfı v. Turkey \(no. 32093/10\)

The applicant association, Cumhuriyetçi Eğitim ve Kültür Merkezi Vakfı, or CEM Vakfı (the Foundation for Republican Education and Culture), is a foundation set up under Turkish law in 1995.

The case concerned the possibility under Turkish law for places of worship to be granted an exemption from paying electricity bills and the refusal to grant this privilege to the applicant foundation.

By judgment of 2 December 2014 the Court ruled that there had been a violation of Article 14 (prohibition of discrimination) read in conjunction with Article 9 (freedom of thought, conscience and religion) on account of the fact that the Turkish regulations on the exemption of places of worship from paying electricity bills amounted to legal discrimination on grounds of religion. By judgment of 20 June 2017 regarding just satisfaction, the Court decided that general measures should have been adopted at the national level in order to eliminate the discrimination resulting from the exemption regulations, and awarded the applicant foundation the sum of 44,400 euros (EUR) in respect of pecuniary damage and EUR 10,000 in respect of non-pecuniary damage.

On 5 October 2017, relying on Rule 80 of the Rules of Court, the Government submitted a request for revision of the judgment delivered on 20 June 2017. The Government primarily requested that the sum of EUR 44,400 awarded in respect of pecuniary damage be decreased to EUR 23,300.

Gömi v. Turkey \(no. 38704/11\)

The applicant, Mr Kemal Gömi, is a Turkish national who was born in 1969. He is currently detained in Bolu.

The case concerns the continued detention of the applicant, who has suffered from a psychotic illness since 2003.

In 1997 Mr. Gömi was sentenced to death after being accused and tried for attempted overthrow of the constitutional order by force. His sentence was commuted to life imprisonment following the abolition of the death penalty. From 2003 onwards Mr Gömi has been admitted to a number of different hospitals owing to his deteriorating mental health. In May 2004 a board of specialists from the Institute of Forensic Medicine issued a report stating that the applicant's mental illness was not of a degree or extent requiring a mitigation of sentence.

In June 2004, after the applicant had resumed intensive treatment at a psychiatric hospital, he was diagnosed with depression and various psychotic symptoms. The applicant returned to prison in September 2004 despite the symptoms persisting. In June 2006 a board of specialists diagnosed chronic schizophrenia, confirmed in March 2007 by a report drawn up by the Psychiatric Hospital's Health Board.

In 2012 the Observation Board of the Institute of Forensic Medicine issued a report stating that Mr Gömi was suffering from a mental illness known as a "psychotic disorder", but that there was no evidence to suggest that he had already had that disorder at the time of committing the offence of which he had been convicted. He had therefore been criminally liable at the time in question.

In November 2015 the applicant sent a letter to the Ankara State Prosecutor requesting hospitalisation.

Relying on Article 3 (prohibition of inhuman or degrading treatment), the applicant complains that his conditions of detention are incompatible with his state of mental health. He submits that imprisonment for the rest of his life amounts to inhuman and degrading treatment, given that he is mentally incapable of comprehending the penalty imposed on him.

Ruşen Bayar v. Turkey \(no. 25253/08\)

The applicant, Ruşen Bayar, is a Turkish national who was born in 1972. He is currently being detained in Tekirdağ (Turkey).

The case concerns the length of the applicant's pre-trial detention and the fairness of his trial on terrorism-related charges.

Mr Bayar was arrested in November 2003 on suspicion of membership of the PKK/KADEK (Workers' Party of Kurdistan/Kurdistan Freedom and Democracy Congress), an illegal organisation. In December of that year he was charged with various offences, including firing on a police vehicle, involvement in a demonstration where six police officers had been wounded, the killing of a person called M.Y. and membership of a terrorist organisation.

At his trial, which began in December 2004, he denied all the charges, but he was found guilty on all counts in February 2009. He was held in pre-trial detention throughout the period after his arrest and during the proceedings until the court's verdict. The courts trying the case, at first the Istanbul State Security Court and then the Twelfth Chamber of the Istanbul Assize Court, examined his detention after each hearing, either of their own motion or following an application by him. The assize court rejected two objections by him about being kept in pre-trial detention.

The Court of Cassation upheld the trial court's verdict in April 2010.

Relying on Article 5 § 3 (right to liberty and security / entitlement to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial), Mr Bayar complains about the length of his pre-trial detention. He also argues that the proceedings reviewing his pre-trial detention did not comply with Article 5 § 4 (right to have lawfulness of detention decided speedily by a court), while under Article 5 § 5 (right to compensation) he complains of the lack of a compensatory mechanism for violations of Article 5.

He also complains that the length of the proceedings did not comply with Article 6 § 1 (right to a fair trial within a reasonable time), and that the denial to him of legal assistance when he made statements to the police, public prosecutor and investigating judge had violated Article 6 §§ 1 and 3 (c) (right to a fair trial and right to legal assistance of own choosing). He also complains under the latter heading that the trial court used his statements to the police when convicting him.

Relying on Article 13 (right to an effective remedy), he complains of the absence of an effective remedy under Turkish law to contest the length of the proceedings brought against him.

He also raises a complaint that the Istanbul State Security Court refused to summon a certain S.N., denying him the right to confront that witness in the matter of M.Y.'s death.

Garbuz v. Ukraine \(no. 72681/10\)

The applicant, Mykola Garbuz, is a Ukrainian national who was born in 1952 and died in 2013. In August 2017 his wife expressed her wish to pursue the application in his stead.

The case concerns an alleged failure to examine certain witnesses in criminal proceedings.

In February 2002 P., a businessman, contacted the police, stating that Mr Garbuz, who was then the director of a municipal housing management agency, had demanded money from him in exchange for permission to use some premises managed by the agency. The police, in the presence of two attesting witnesses, gave P. banknotes marked with a luminescent substance only visible in special lighting, to be given to Mr Garbuz as a bribe, and an audio recorder. After P. had gone into Mr Garbuz's office in order to deliver the money, the police went in to arrest him. The attesting witnesses followed. In their presence, the police discovered the luminescent substance on his hand and pocket while the marked banknotes were found in a room adjoining his office.

On the same day Mr Garbuz confessed to accepting the money from P. He subsequently retracted the confession, claiming that it had been extracted under "physical and psychological pressure" from the police. He then was charged with fraud.

In the course of the trial Mr Garbuz pleaded not guilty and argued that the banknotes had been placed in the agency by the police, who had also smeared his hand and pocket with the luminescent substance to frame him. The attesting witnesses were repeatedly summoned to testify at the trial but failed to appear as they could not be found at their home addresses. After adjourning and rescheduling the hearings at least 33 times, the trial court finally read out those witnesses' pre-trial statements as they had failed to appear.

In October 2009 the District Court convicted Mr Garbuz of fraud, sentenced him to two years' detention and waived enforcement of the sentence as it had become time-barred. Mr Garbuz appealed and lodged an appeal on points of law, arguing in particular that P., the attesting witnesses and another witness had not been examined in the course of the trial. Both appeals were rejected.

Relying on Article 6 §§ 1 and 3 (d) (right to a fair trial and right to obtain attendance and examination of witnesses) Mr Garbuz complains that the trial court failed to ensure the presence of P., the attesting witnesses and another witness and that, therefore, he had had no opportunity to examine them.

Mammadov and Others v. Azerbaijan (no. 35432/07)

The applicants are Novruzali Khanmammad oglu Mammadov, who was born in 1942, his wife, Maryam Aliaga gizi Mammadova, and their son, Emil Novruzali oglu Mammadov. They are or were Azerbaijani nationals.

The case concerns the first applicant, who was an academic specialising in the Talysh language and was editor-in-chief of an Azerbaijani-Talysh newspaper, and his complaints about unlawful detention and ill-treatment by officers of the Ministry of National Security ("the MNS") in 2007 as well as his subsequent pre-trial detention. He died in detention in 2009 and his wife and son continued the proceedings in his stead, lodging a further complaint concerning his death. The son died in 2011 and his mother continued the proceedings.

Mr Mamamadov was arrested by MNS officers on 2 February 2007 in a park in Baku and taken for questioning about his alleged collaboration with the Iranian intelligence service. He was released 24 hours later near a metro station, but was immediately re-arrested by the police for refusing to identify himself. He was taken before a judge the same day, found guilty of failing to comply with a lawful order by a police officer and sentenced to 15 days' administrative detention.

Just before he was due to be released, he was charged with high treason and placed in pre-trial detention for three months. The courts extended his period of detention over the next year and four months on the grounds of the seriousness of the charges and the possibility of his absconding or obstructing the investigation. The courts later also cited the need for more time to carry out the investigation. Mr Mammadov's requests to be released because of his age and the fact that he had a permanent place of residence were not examined.

The case went to trial in November 2007. He was convicted of the charges in June 2008 and sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment.

In the meantime, Mr Mammadov himself, his lawyer and his family had raised several complaints before the authorities and courts alleging unlawful detention and ill-treatment. No criminal investigation has been carried out into these complaints.

During his detention Mr Mammadov was examined by doctors on numerous occasions in 2007 and 2008 on account of ill health. Between March and July 2009 he refused to be transferred to a specialist medical facility because he said he could not afford it and, in any case, he doubted the quality of the care there. He eventually accepted a transfer at the end of July 2009 and was seen by a number of specialists, but died on 17 August 2009.

The prosecuting authorities immediately launched an enquiry into his death but refused to institute criminal proceedings because of a lack of evidence of a crime. They based their decision on two reports concluding that Mr Mammadov had died from a heart attack and that this had not been related to his medical care, which had been adequate. The domestic courts upheld this decision.

Relying on Article 5 §§ 1 and 3 (right to liberty and security / entitlement to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial), Mr Mammadov complained in particular that his detention between 2 and 3 February 2007 had been unlawful and that the domestic courts had failed to justify his subsequent pre-trial detention or examine his arguments in favour of his release. Also relying on Article 3 (prohibition of inhuman or degrading treatment), he alleged that he had been ill-treated by MNS officers between 2 and 17 February 2007 and that the authorities had failed to investigate his allegation. He also alleged that he had not been provided with medical care during this period of his detention. Lastly, his wife and son allege that he died in detention owing to inadequate medical care, notably the delay in his transfer to a specialist medical facility, and that there was no effective investigation into his death, in breach of Article 2 (right to life).

Lolov and Others v. Bulgaria \(no. 6123/11\)

The applicants, Mr Svetlozar Mihaylov Lolov, Ms Romyana Stoycheva Lolova, a married couple, Mr Stamen Svetlozarov Lolov, their son, and Mr Rangel Ivanov Stanchev, who is not a relative, are Bulgarian nationals who were born in 1964, 1963, 1984 and 1975 respectively. Mr and Ms Lolovi currently live in the United States, and the other two applicants live in Burgas, Bulgaria.

The case concerns a charge of tax evasion which was allegedly organised by the applicants, the first two of whom were business people working in the tourism and real estate sectors.

In April 2009 the Burgas Regional Prosecutor's Office initiated a criminal investigation against several people for large-scale tax evasion. On 25 June 2010 a judge authorised a search of Mr and Ms Lolovi's home in Sozopol. An investigator charged them, in absentia, with criminal conspiracy to organise tax evasion and with several counts of extortion from workers who they had employed on their company's worksites. On the same date Mr Stanchev was charged with participating in Mr and Ms Lolovi's criminal activities and in several cases of extortion. In June and July 2010 a series of articles were published in the press and on the Internet concerning the police operation in question. On 13 August 2013, following the withdrawal of all the prosecutors in the Burgas Regional Prosecutor's Office, the criminal proceedings were assigned to the Yambol Regional Prosecutor's Office. Subsequently, on 24 October 2014 and 19 August 2016, all the criminal proceedings were terminated on the basis that no criminal offence had been committed.

Meanwhile, on 26 June 2010, Mr Stanchev had been arrested by the police and was held in custody for 24 hours. Suffering from diabetes, he was taken into hospital on account of the worrying state of his health. The next day a prosecutor from the Burgas Regional Prosecutor's Office ordered his detention until 29 June 2010. On that day he was taken from the hospital to appear at the regional court. After the hearing the court decided that in view of the applicant's state of health and the need to prevent him from absconding and committing further offences, he should be placed under house arrest. In August 2011 the regional court replaced the house arrest with bail. That order was lifted on 3 July 2012 on the expiry of the legal time-limit.

Relying on Article 5 §§ 1, 3 and 5 (right to liberty and security), Mr Stanchev complains that his initial detention before his court appearance was unlawful and that he was not taken promptly brought before a judge. He complains that he had no domestic remedy against that decision. Relying on Article 6 § 2 (presumption of innocence) and Article 8 (right to respect for private life), Mr and Ms Lolovi and Mr Stanchev complain of a violation of the right to the presumption of innocence and the right to respect for their private life on account of the publication of a communiqué from the Ministry of the Interior on 29 June 2010. Relying on Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 (protection of property), the third applicant, Stamen Lolov, complains about the seizure of his computer. Relying on Article 13 (right to an effective remedy), all the applicants complain of the lack of effective domestic remedies that could provide redress for the alleged violations of their rights.

Gablshvili and Others v. Georgia \(no. 7088/11\)

The applicants, Giorgi Gablshvili, Romik Kasyanovi, Zurab Gachechiladze, and Giorgi Mtchedlidze, are Georgian nationals who were born in 1988, 1982, 1984, and 1987 respectively. At the relevant time they were serving their sentences in Rustavi Prison no. 1 (Georgia).

The case concerns the alleged ill-treatment of prisoners and the national authorities' failure to conduct an effective investigation in that regard.

On 30 March 2009 the applicants were arrested in a yard behind the prison during an alleged attempt to flee. According to their submissions, they had left the confinement area through an open door, climbed over a high wall and had jumped down into the back yard. There they were attacked by prison officers who severely beat them with wooden sticks and iron pipes. After the arrest the applicants were placed in a punishment cell, where their beating continued.

On the same day the Ministry of Prisons opened a criminal investigation into the circumstances of the attempted escape. The investigator questioned the applicants, who blamed all of their injuries on a fall from a prison wall. The investigator further commissioned an expert from the National Forensic Bureau who concluded that the applicants' injuries could have been caused by blows with hard, blunt objects inflicted at the time of the attempted escape.

In court proceedings the applicants withdrew their initial statements and testified that they had been ill-treated during their arrest. In December 2009 the Rustavi City Court convicted them of attempting to escape from prison. The second and third applicants were also found guilty of resisting prison officers in the exercise of their duties. All their appeals were rejected.

The applicants complained to the Chief Prosecutor of ill-treatment and requested the initiation of criminal proceedings. The Ministry of Prisons interviewed the prison governor and four prison officers who had been involved in the incident and all of them denied that the applicants had been beaten.

On 20 August 2012 the prosecutor in charge of the case decided to discontinue the proceedings for lack of evidence of a crime. He fully accepted the prison officers' version of the events, concluding that the applicants could have been injured when they had jumped down from the wall. The applicants were not informed about the decision and only found out about it in 2014.

Relying on Article 3 (prohibition of torture and of inhuman or degrading treatment) the applicants complain that they were ill-treated by prison officers during their arrest after their attempt to escape from prison and immediately thereafter. They further allege that the authorities failed to conduct a thorough, adequate, and independent investigation into their allegations of ill-treatment.

Ahunbay and Others v. Turkey \(no. 6080/06\)

The applicants are five Turkish nationals (two professors, an architect-archaeologist, a journalist and a lawyer), involved in various projects on the Hasankeyf archaeological site in Batman (Turkey). They were born between 1934 and 1963 and live in Turkey. One of them died in 2014 and his wife decided to continue the application.

The case concerns the potential impact of the planned construction of the Ilisu dam on the Hasankeyf archaeological site, which is a place of archaeological and cultural interest dating back more than 12,000 years.

Relying on various articles of the Convention, including, in particular, Article 8 (right to respect for private life) and Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 (right to education), the applicants complain that the planned construction of the dam is liable to destroy the Hasankeyf archaeological site, which they submit would amount to a violation of the right of mankind and future generations to education. They also allege that the plan to move certain monuments from the site would be impossible to implement, and that many of the archaeological remains do not lend themselves to such treatment. Consequently they ask the Court to indicate preventive measures to the Government before the Hasankeyf site is submerged or the monuments are moved unduly. Lastly, the applicants complain of the project's disastrous effects on the environment, and more specifically of the irreversible impact the destruction of the site and the dam's construction would have on the region's ecology and landscape.
