Stomakhin v. Russia \(application no. 52273/07\)

The applicant, Mr Boris Vladimirovich Stomakhin, is a Russian national who was born in 1974 and lives in Vsesvyatskaya (Russia).

The case concerns Mr Stomakhin's conviction and sentence to five years in jail for newsletter articles he had written on the armed conflict in Chechnya, which the domestic courts said had justified terrorism and violence and incited hatred.

Mr Stomakhin was convicted of the offences in November 2006, which was upheld on appeal in May 2007, of expressing views in a newsletter which he ran which amounted to appeals to carry out extremist activities and to incitement to racial, national, and social hatred.

He denied supporting extremism and said he had simply expressed his opinion on political events in Russia, in particular the conflict in Chechnya. He served a five-year prison sentence in full. He was also given a three-year ban on practising journalism.

He complains about his conviction under Articles 10 (freedom of expression) and 11 (freedom of assembly) of the European Convention on Human Rights and about his trial under Article 6 (right to a fair trial).
